

MR. HENDRICKS AT HOME,

And, as Usual, Most Heartily Received by His Fellow-Citizens,

Whom He Addresses Briefly on the Subject of His Stewardship—Something of the "Rush" for Office.

Vice President Hendricks returned from Washington at noon Saturday, and his arrival at home after an absence of three months was made the occasion of a very pleasant event last night. The local Democracy and many citizens besides who appreciate the distinguished services of the Vice President, but who differ from him in politics, prepared to visit his residence, on North Tennessee street, and at 7:30 o'clock began to assemble in front of the Bates, where the scene was enlivened by strains from a band of music. A half hour later a large crowd had assembled and the column moved off in the direction of Mr. Hendricks' home, headed by the band. Reaching the residence, the spacious yard was entirely filled with people, many ladies being among the number, all anxious to see the distinguished citizen and congratulate him on his return to the people who delight to do him honor. A look over the crowd justified the conclusion that the reception to Mr. Hendricks partook more of a social than of a partisan nature, and on this account must have proved doubly gratifying to him. In the crowd was the endorsement of himself both as a citizen and an honored statesman, one of whose private virtues the people are proud and whose public career has brought deserved honor upon the name of our State. Indeed, the evidences of respect and confidence shown the Vice President by our citizens last night proved no exception to other occasions on which he has realized that he is dear to all. "Hail to the Chief" and "Hail Columbia" were successively played by the band after three times three rousing cheers had been given for the Vice President.

Mr. Hendricks stood in the front door as the music ceased, and Judge Buskirk, who acted as spokesman for the visitors, said: "On behalf of the citizens of Indianapolis, Mr. Hendricks, we have come to bid you welcome to your home and express our satisfaction at your safe return. Believe us, that the citizens of this State feel for you the most profound regard, and will ever hold in high regard your wisdom and patriotism. Their confidence and their respect are alike unbounded, and on this occasion they bid you welcome and say, 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant.' We bid you welcome to your old home and the friends who know you and love you best."

In response Mr. Hendricks said that it was always a great pleasure for him to return home, and to the friends with whom he had associated for so many years, for the pleasure of his past life were revived and many of the scenes of former days were thus brought to mind and they always give happiness. "On this occasion is added a welcome from you, my friends, for which I am indeed grateful, and which I fully appreciate and accept. With all of you I have associated as a citizen; with some as jurors, with others as judges. You have known me. My sentiments, my emotions have not been concealed from you. What I favored and what I opposed you knew, for I have attempted to conceal nothing. Of course, I enjoy your welcome. I left here three months ago to discharge the duties of a very responsible position. I might have returned sooner, but such was not my desire. I remained in Washington to secure offices for those of Indiana whom I knew to be worthy and who wanted them. I had no other purpose in remaining away from my home. It might have been more pleasant to return here, but I did not regard my duty to the people of the State as complete when they honored me with the office of Vice President. I believed when this title was fought and the victory won that it was ordered by the people that changes should be made, and I knew that Indiana was entitled to consideration in these changes. You have been told in certain newspapers that I was a barger for office; that such a course was inconsistent and unworthy of the position which I hold. Is it unbecoming for a Vice President to plead for the people who elect him to office? Is it unbecoming for a man to ask for his people that which they have earned by their votes? Don't you recollect that I asked, during the campaign, that, if defeat should come to me, I should not come to Indiana. A certain gentleman called me a mendicant because I asked this of the people. And, yet, I was in a convention with that man before which he was a candidate and he got but thirteen votes. I didn't think he appealed very strongly. I don't think he was a mendicant and don't think he knows the meaning of the term. I appealed to the people because I thought the time had come for a change, and I wanted the people to have it. When the fight was over the result was very gratifying to me. I got more than thirteen votes. Indeed, I didn't know how many I'd get. I asked the people for their votes, and when they asked me for help I gave it. Wouldn't I have been an ingrate not to have done so? If I commit any fault in this matter I am determined that it shall be in asking and not in refusing to rest for what our people want. Many men come to Washington perfect strangers. From the President down they know no man connected with the administration. Must no one introduce these men? Must the offices all be parcelled out to men who have influence? and must those who are not worthy be introduced because no one will introduce them? I am glad I stayed in Washington six weeks after the adjournment of the Senate. I was there working for my people, and in doing so I discharged as high a duty as presiding over the deliberations of the Senate. I had no purpose save the good of the people. I did not do this for self, for I have no idea of being connected with any future ticket. I believe in those doctrines which teach that all the people should be represented, and upon them I based my acts. I think the administration will go on and make changes as rapidly as consistent with an impartial investigation of all matters connected therewith. It is twenty-five years since Democrats stood side by side in the offices of the Government, and believe a change has been demanded by the people and the sentiment is in accordance with true patriotism."

Mr. Hendricks' remarks were listened to with apparent pleasure by the crowd, and during their utterance and at their close he was heartily applauded. In conversation with the Vice President soon after his return, he said that he was in the best of health, but was glad to be at his old home after his three months' absence. Referring to Washington City, he said that many changes had taken place since he was there sixteen years ago as a public servant, and this was especially noticeable in the Government departments. He did not regard the rush for office as great as the newspapers were inclined to make it appear, and, according to the best information he could gather, it was not as great as four years ago when there was no change of administration.

DIAMOND SPORT.

The Home Team Defeats Omaha Again—Kansas City Whitewashed at Milwaukee—Cleveland Defeats Toledo—Other Games—Notes.

The attendance at the Bruce Park to witness the second of the Indianapolis-Omaha series was not nearly so large as it usually is on Sunday, there not being more than 1,500 people present. The visitors presented their strongest battery, O'Donnell and Sandie, while Casey and McGuire occupied the points for the home team. Neither pitcher was hit hard, as the score will show, but the young left-handed twirler was much more effective than O'Donnell, twelve of the visitors fanning the gentle summer breeze. He was well supported behind the bat and in the field, the home team making but two errors, one of which, that by Collins, counted for nothing. The visitors fielded wretchedly in the earlier stages of the game, making half of their errors in the first inning, when the home team secured three of the four runs. As on the previous day the game was not characterized by any brilliant plays, and the only real feature was the infield work of L. Say, who accepted everything that came his way, assisting seven times and putting out two men. In the second inning clouds rolled up from the west, and for three or four minutes a powerful wind swept over the ground carrying with it considerable dust. A number of the "bleached board" spectators, in anticipation of a tremendous shower, made a rush for the grand stand and the game was called, but in a short time the wind stopped blowing and play was resumed. In the first inning the home team scored their runs on errors by J. Say, Collins' base on balls, a wild pitch, Graham's mull of L. Say's assist, and Poorman's base on balls. His by Thompson and Collins and O'Donnell's balk enabled them to get another run across the plate in the fifth. The visitors secured their first and only run in the fourth on L. Say's single, McGuire's error and McGuire's throw to catch a runner at second when a man was on third. The game was well played by Sullivan, who was very fair and impartial in all of his decisions. Following is the score:

Table with columns for teams (Omaha, Indianapolis), innings (1-9), and runs, hits, errors (R.H.E.). Includes sub-tables for 'Innings' and 'Left on Bases'.

The Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, of Wednesday last, speaks as follows of the Forepaugh exhibition: The great throng of cheering people that witnessed the circus last night gives evidence that the palmy days of the sawdust circle have not yet passed away. The big top, where the circus proper is given, was entirely filled with an unusually animated, praise bestowing audience. Numerous fashionable circus parties were present, and altogether the audience was much above the average circus assemblage from a society standpoint. Manager Forepaugh has faithfully kept all his promises, and has shown that it is still possible to present new and brilliant circus attractions. The show throughout is a model one, and is conducted in a most commendable manner. The ring performances move with clock-like precision and there is an artistic finish to the whole that is particularly pleasing. The hippodrome races have never been excelled, and are as exciting as the races given on the tracks at Long Branch or Saratoga. Especially thrilling is the ladies' hurdle race and the four-horse chariot contest. Forepaugh's is undoubtedly the best herd of performing elephants in the world. They do an almost entirely new series of tricks since last seen here. "Picanniny," the clown, and "Sullivan," the boxer, have made great hits. It was rumored that there was danger of police interference with the encounter between "Sullivan" and "Eph." Thompson, the sable athlete, but as the strong arm of the law has thus far kept an uplifted hand, it is probable that the sparring is regarded as for "scientific points" only. The bout between these worthies last night excited the rivalry of the audience to an alarming extent. "Eph." succeeded in doing his four-legged antagonist in the first round, but in the second Mr. Elephant de Sullivan knocked out the big Senegambian in a style that would have done credit to the Boston Boy himself. The manager, however, believed "Sullivan" and "Eph." this afternoon and evening will be watched with no little interest. The performance to-night will bring Mr. Forepaugh's very successful engagement to a close. Those who have not yet attended the exhibition would do well to recollect that in all probability there will be no other circus here this season, the Barnum Show by its arrangement with Mr. Forepaugh, being prevented from coming west of Pittsburg this year. The management state that there will be no "cutting" of the programme to-night, but that on the contrary an uncommonly elaborate and attractive programme will be presented.

It Was Another Maude. A New York special of the 23d to the Commercial Gazette says that Miss Maude Stewart, of the Madison Square Theater Company, whose real name is Maude Grubb, of Indianapolis, Ind., and who was reported to have died at St. Vincent's Hospital on Thursday, occupied a box at the Casino that afternoon. "Do not want to be reported dead again," she said. "I have just received a telegram from my mother, who is in Kansas City, requesting that my remains be properly packed in a casket and sent home. It is very distressing. Poor mamma must have been terribly shocked. She is an invalid, too. I have just telegraphed her that I am all right." The same dispatch contains the following information, which would be "a strange coincidence" if it were true: "The Maude Stewart who passed from this stage of existence friendless and poor was buried yesterday morning, at the expense of the Actors' Fund, in the Cemetery of Evergreen. With every development of the mystery of her identity deepens. It is said that by a strange coincidence the real name of the Maude Stewart living and the Maude Stewart dead is the same, and that the mothers of both are known as Mrs. Grubb, and that each came from Indianapolis."

The Bakers' Picnic. The Bakers' Association gave a picnic at the Garfield Park yesterday afternoon, which was largely attended. It is reported that several fights occurred during the day, and the Government departments were more or less injured. Beer was sold on the grounds, and the statement is made that toward evening a gang of South Delaware street heelers took possession of the dancing floor and bar and enjoyed themselves hugely.

Dwyer, the Omaha's regular first baseman, came out to the grounds attired in his "store" clothes and refused to play, saying his arm was too sore. Manager Hey persuaded, but seeing that it was of no avail, turned angrily on his heel with the announcement that Dwyer would have to stand the consequences. This did not seem to frighten Dwyer, however, and the result was that Graham played the base.

A DESPERADO CAPTURED. George Rowland, a Noted Virginia Horse-thief, in Custody. For Forging the Name of an Illinois Mar and Securing $1,013 from Middletown, Graybill & Co.

On Monday last the Sentinel contained a statement that the Stock Yard firm of Middletown, Graybill & Co., had reported a forgery to the police, and that the same was alleged to have been committed by an Illinois man. Upon seeking further information, however, it was learned from a member of the firm that the man who was the partner in the Illinois firm for whom the sale had been made, and that Middletown, Graybill & Co. would suffer no loss by his default. It now transpires, however, that the stock-yard firm was either themselves mistaken or attempted to mislead the reporters who called upon them for information regarding the alleged forgery. Saturday evening Captain Colbert returned from Lexington, Ky., with George Rowland, a noted Virginia horse and cattle thief, of Berryville, Va., in custody, he being the man who secured $1,013 from the Stock Yards firm on a forged letter signed with the name of Grandison Clark, of Wheeler, Ill.

The facts connected with the case appear to be as follows: Rowland incriminated himself into the hands of the police on several occasions while in this city in charge of stock for the latter, who did considerable business with the Indianapolis firm, and represented himself as a partner, giving the name of Charles Greene, by which he was known to Clark. On May 11 Clark wrote the firm that he would ship a horse and cattle, but directing the exchange to be sent to Newton, Ill. Next day Green forged a letter to the firm, signing the name of Clark, asking that the exchange be not sent to Newton, but the payment made by Green. The latter came to this city and got the money, amounting to $1,013. The horse and cattle were shipped to the firm, and an overdraft of $300 and a telegram from Clark asking for the returns from his shipment were found in the pocket of his drawers. Clark immediately went to Wheeler and discovered that Green had received letters at Fort List Postoffice and sent letters from there to Middletown, Graybill & Co., of Lexington, Va. To Virginia he hastened, and found that George Rowland, whom he had identified with Charles Green, was said to be a noted cattle and horse thief, and a desperado in Clark's county. The postoffice was visited, and it was found that the family sent a letter addressed J. J. Harris, 199 East Main street, Lexington, Ky. Graybill and there soon after, and by the aid of the police had his man under arrest. Eight hundred and thirty-nine dollars were found in the pocket of his drawers and this, with a silver watch, was taken from him. He expressed a willingness to be brought back to this city, and Captain Colbert was sent after him and returned Saturday night as before stated. Rowland is said to be a well-known desperado character and is in general bad odor in Virginia. It is said of him that he once escaped hanging at the hands of a party of citizens who went to mob him by passing from his house to the woods by passing through a tunnel dug for that purpose. As Mr. Graybill secured $839 the firm will be out only about $164 and the trouble and expense of catching the thief, to which no little credit attaches.
